Playoff Wagers Not Just Meat and Beer

While politicians wager Philly cheese steak sandwiches for Rocky Mountain oysters and tamales for beer, local florists, BJ Dyer and Guenther Vogt of Bouquets sealed their deal with Chad and Scott Kremp of Kremp Florist in Philadelphia for a box of locally grown posies.

"We're in this for the long haul" claimed Vogt, "and I look forward to the Rockies slugging it out again with the Yankees at Coors Field, this time for the World Series Championship title."

Vogt, originally from New York, has with partner BJ Dyer, created a network of members of the Society of American Florists to represent each of the eight major league ball teams in contention for that title.

At the conclusion of each playoff series the ante will increase. "We're eager to see what diehard Diamondbacks fan Ken Young, of Phoenix Flower Shops, has to offer for the title of National League Champs" said Dyer.

If it gets as far as the Rockies playing the Yankees, the loser is prepared to work in the winner's flower shop for a weekend and create a grand bouquet of flowers to congratulate the 2007 World Series Championship winning team.

"We're located just blocks from Coors Field and have already set aside a space at our shop where the New York florist can work" touted Vogt as he smiled with victory in mind.
